HONGKONG, FEBRUARY 9TH, 1891.

The question whether the recent commercial depression from which the Colony has suffered, and from which it has unfortunately not yet quite recovered, has been attended by a decrease of population will shortly be definitely set at rest by the taking of the census. We have recently been surprised to learn that the impression that there has been a decrease is entertained by some whose position might be expected to lend weight to their opinion. When referring to the subject on previous occasions we have maintained that there has not only been no decrease, but that there has been very little—check to the increase. This view is supported by the recently published report of the Committee appointed by the Sanitary Board to inquire into the question of over-crowding. More evidence in the same direction is afforded by the annual report of Mr. C. V. Linds, the Colonial Veterinary Surgeon. If the quantity of food brought into the Colony for consumption increases, it is only reasonable to suppose that it is because there are more mouths to be fed. Mr. Linds tells us that since the year 1866 the importation of cattle for slaughter has increased by more than a thousand head per annum, and there has no doubt been a corresponding increase in other articles of food. The total number of animals slaughtered last year was 18,519 cattle, 10,691 sheep, and 123,883 swine. The bulk of these were slaughtered at the Victoria slaughter-house, the figures being 16,829 cattle, 10,691 sheep, and 11,813 swine, showing an increase of 556 cattle and 3,872 swine and a decrease of 19 sheep for the year. Mr. Linds' suggestion that the decrease in the number of sheep is probably due to their increased value is faintly suggestive of hard times, but the increase in the number of cattle and swine seems to point conclusively to the fact that a very considerable increase of population took place during the year. It may not have been quite so great as in the previous year or the one before that, but it must have been in itself very substantial. From the figures given by Mr. Linds it would appear that the Colony consumes on an average daily 44 cattle, 27 sheep, 308 swine, 1,711 fowls, and 2,103 ducks. Considering how little flesh meat is as a rule used by the Chinese, these figures are rather striking.The report that Germany was trying to obtain the cession of a Siamese port in the territory to the North of Penang has caused the Straits Times to urge that England should insist upon a recognition of the Monroe doctrine as regards the Malay Peninsula. Sir JAMES FENIXEON, the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, is replied to a question in the House of Commons, gave a denial to the report as to Germany's intentions, which our contemporary suggest was based on much the same idle rumours as those which caused Sir ANDREW CLARK to make an alarmist speech on 29th June last at a Straits Settlements dinner.

They may or may not have been idle, but as the Singapore paper remarks, it is unprobable that there should be such rumour, although perhaps they may be ordered for good if the Colonial Office will prompt the Marquis of SALISBURY to explain generally that any European effort to obtain territory in the Straits could only be regarded by England as deliberately unfriendly act.One by one the native states are in the natural sequence of events coming under British protection. It is British enterprise that has brought the peninsula up to its present state as a valuable commercial field, and the interference of any other country, whose commercial policy instead of being one of freedom might be the same as that adopted by France in Tonkin, could not be brooked. Under the British flag commerce is free to all, as free to the foreigner as to the British subject, so that no other Power can have any excuse for intrusion on this score, and it would be equally unreasonable to expect Great Britain to assent to the establishment of a foreign coaling-station on territory rightly regarded as within her exclusive sphere of influence. Sir JAMES FENIXEON was able to refute the report which appears to have been in circulation as regards Germany's intentions, but the question may arise in a more serious form on some future occasion, and it would be well for England to be in a position and claims be clearly understood.The following will represent the Civilians in Brigade had got its hose to bear upon the flames, they had spread to the next house. The occupants of the house—in which the fire originated, were from home. The occupants of the next house were able to escape safely and also to remove some of the more valuable property. Both houses were insured, one of them only as late as last week.

The Volunteer Fire Brigade were hardly so ready for their duties as might be the case at another time, and the chief honour of the occasion fell to the Chinese, who promptly came over from the city and rendered most valuable assistance. This is, we believe, the second fire known on the Foreign Settlement.

HAIPHONG.

[BY A CORRESPONDENT.]

HAIPHONG, 1st February, 1891.

A most successful banquet was given last night by the members of the Circle of Commerce to Monsieur Chevassieux, the Resident Mair of Haiphong, the occasion being his approaching departure for Europe. Monsieur Chevassieux having gained the affections of everybody he has come in contact with, it was not at all surprising to see the large number of members who sat down to table. The banquet was laid with great taste, and the character of the various wines and vintages more than came up to what was expected from the high sounding names on the menu; in fact, M. Gauquard did full justice to his established reputation as a caterer.

Good humour and kindness of feeling pervaded everything, and when Monsieur d'Abbadie rose to propose the health of the honoured guest, who he did in a most eloquent manner, the toast was received with the utmost enthusiasm. Monsieur Chevassieux returned thanks in his most happy manner, and other speeches followed, showing how much our general residents are esteemed. The company had a very pleasant evening and did not break up till the small hours of the morning.

The reason for M. Chevassieux's departure is the bad state of his health, which has for some time past given his friends some anxiety. During the time of our Resident's holding his present appointment he has by his ability, tact, and kindliness proved himself a most able administrator, and it is to be hoped that in the interests of Indo-China, where he has passed many of the best years of his life and to which he is greatly attached, he may in the near future return to reap the fruit of his labours in holding the highest posts in the service.

We understand that M. Chevassieux goes home on the next mail via Hongkong, and we wish him, from our heart, a pleasant passage, speedy recovery, a good time at home, and quick promotion.

SCIENTIFIC MISCELLANY.

In an experiment described to the French Academy of Sciences, M. Ch. V. Zenger has invited the rotation of the earth by means of a hollow glass globe and a Wimshurst electro machine. The globe was silvered on the inside and supported on a steel axis. Placed between the poles of a magnet, the electro machine caused the electric points to pass at one side of the axis, the globe began to rotate when the crank of the machine was turned, and continued to move with a degree of regularity and speed varying with the motion generating the current. From this effect it was argued that the motions of the planets of our solar system have an electro-dynamic origin.

A French metallurgist, M. Chagnaire, has succeeded in making distilled zinc—a commercial product. This is a clear, pale, and strong zinc, more expensive than the ordinary (which contains such impurities as lead, tin, cadmium, copper, antimony, from, silicon, sulphur, and arsenic), but is more malleable than the ordinary metal, and is easily split or drawn into plates or rods of great strength. Zinc is conducted much more rapidly and much more regularly than the ordinary zinc (even when the latter is perfectly amalgamated), and gives a more constant discharge.

Two German medical men have taken advantage of the property of sulphon of boric acid, Violent analine dyes, free from arsenic, proving to be without poisonous effect on guinea-pig and rabbit, eye-droppers were produced in those animals, and successfully treated them. A picture of a scrofulous child is given, which shows the decided reduction of a solution of salina. The substance was subsequently found valuable in a bad case of eye-disease, and in general for sterilizing suppuring wounds and sores.

Dr. Russell, an Edinburgh pathologist, claims to have discovered the cancer parasite which is the curse of the yeast type.

Dr. G. W. Hinschberg urges that an important step toward the suppression of consumption is the fitting of the body to resist it. He rejects the accepted theory and regards the disease as depending upon conditions that reduce the breathing surface of the lungs below a certain proportion of the rest of the body. These conditions are the absence of exercise, and his experiments—include sedentary life and occupations, want of exercise, defective clothes, tight clothing, and whatever may tend to compress the lungs and prevent full expansion of the lungs. Remedies are fresh country life, well-ventilated rooms, and a diet of light food.

The suggestion that the phonograph might be used for recording the sounds characteristic of certain diseases has been successfully tested at a London Hospital. The whoop of whooping cough, with the intervening cries of the patient, were as vividly reproduced as the child's voice in the recording, and the record was of great interest. It was evident that the phonographic record of such sounds must prove of great value for teaching, and probably for many other purposes.

A photo-chronograph apparatus for analysing the speed of motion has been devised by M. Marceau. A photographic film is moved on an electric motor across a camera's focus, and may be interrupted 50 times a second for the production of as many views of the object.

Messrs. Frimley and Vernouil have produced artificial rubies on a large scale, and of greater size than heretofore. They are equal to the natural rubies for the watchmakers.

Luminous clouds, according to Mr. O. Jesso, were first seen in June, 1885, from the vicinity of Berlin. The time was 9.30 p.m., when the sun was about 9 deg. below the horizon—too low to shine upon ordinary clouds. Continued observations since then have shown that these luminous clouds have a certain periodic character, their appearances are not regular, having been between the last of May and the first of August, and that they travel in the earth's atmosphere in such a manner that during the months of December and January they tend to be found in the southern hemisphere. In addition to about 40 deg. to 60 deg. of motion, measured in the height of some 40 to 60 miles, and the light seems to be due mainly to direct illumination by the sun. These important peculiarities of a remarkable phenomenon have been firmly established: (1) The luminous clouds have had in general a very rapid motion, and (2) they are much more numerous and more movements in the opposite direction have been taken place in some cases. (2) Since their first appearance luminous clouds have to a considerable extent waned. In 1890 they have displayed a beautiful brilliancy during only about one night; at other times they have been for the most part faded. (3) Luminous clouds present themselves generally more brightly—there are more frequently visible after than before midnight. While in the first years they appeared before midnight very frequently, they have done so in the last years very seldom. After midnight they still appear pretty often.
